Introduction

The Australian Mining Company is a multi-commodity exploration company that has a strong focus on exploration and mineral licences in highly prospective locations that it considers has a substantial amount of potential for discovery. Australian Mining Company exploration areas are based in the heart of the regions in South Australia.

These and other strategic land holdings have targeted exploration and drilling campaigns and constant purchasing potential for new tenements and rights in specific locations within South Australia and expand to Western Australia, Victoria, Queensland and the Northern Territory. With the objective of acquiring mineral projects with the potential to be developed into profitable mining operations.

Australian Mining Company will seek to secure prospective areas in its own right or through acquisition or joint venture as new opportunities arise, the ultimate objective being to define world-class resources. Providing they are high-grade, smaller discoveries that may be of economic benefit to the Company by generating early cash flow to fund on-going exploration, with the objective of acquiring mineral projects with the potential to be developed into profitable mining operations.
